Albuquerque, New Mexico-headquartered Part 135 operator specialising in complex aviation operations CSI Aviation held an official ribbon cutting ceremony to celebrate the opening of its new hangar at the Killeen-Fort Hood Regional airport. The event was organised by the City of Killeen together with the airport, with key community stakeholders attending.

Speeches were made by Killeen mayor Debbie Nash-King, city manager Kent Cagle, congressman John Carter, state representative Brad Buckley and airport executive director of aviation Mike Wilson. Members of the Killeen Chamber of Commerce were also in attendance.

CSI Aviation CEO and retired marine colonel Allen Weh spoke on behalf of the company and its increasing presence in Texas. The company is now providing air ambulance, cargo and air charter services across the state. CSI's new hangar has 22,000 sq ft of space and will be a centralised maintenance facility as well as an air ambulance, air charter and cargo base.

Both Weh and COO William 'Rock' Collins accepted a certificate of appreciation from the Killeen Chamber of Commerce. Weh, Wilson, Nash-King and Carter then cut the ceremonial ribbon in celebration of the hangar's completion and the expansion of CSI's Texas operations.
