

CSI receives award for Guard and Reserve support

Gary Gerew | Assistant Editor-Albuquerque Business First | May 7, 2014

CSI Aviation has received the Employer Support of the Guard and Reserve's Pro Patria award.

The award is given by ESGR, which is a Defense Department office to promote cooperation and understanding between Reserve Component Service members and their civilian employers.

CSI CEO Allen Weh also received a separate "Patriotic Employer" award. "It's a huge honor to receive this recognition," Weh said in a statement. "But the real honor is to do everything we can, every day, to make life a little easier for those who serve our country."

CSI, which is based in Albuquerque, was also a semifinalist for the national Freedom award. The award comes a few weeks after the newspaper Military Times recognized CSI in its 59 "Best for Vets: Employers" list.

"Hiring military service men and women is an intentional part of our corporate culture," said William "Rock" Collins, CSI President and one of the six veterans on the 11-member CSI leadership team. "Veterans bring exceptional professional training and a strong sense of ethics to their work, and we find that these attributes are a perfect match for our clients."